New York, New York is a hell-uv-a town,
The Bronx is up and the Battery's down,
And people ride in a hole in the ground.
New York, New York — It's a hell-uv-a town

New York, New York is a visitor's place, Where no one lives on account of the pace,
But several million are screaming for space.
New York, New York is a visitor's place.

TO ALL THE STUDENTS OF HILLCREST HIGH SCHOOL

Dear Students,

This year our school annual, PROSPECTUS, is dedicated to New York City. As the song goes, "New York, New York Is a Wonderful Town," the Class of 1975, to whom this book is dedicated will soon be seeking the fortunes to be found within the five boroughs.

The public school system contains almost one hundred high schools, twenty-three of which are located in the borough of Queens. City high schools are like no others in this country; they are large, complex, and provide multiple opportunities for all of the young people who attend. Hillcrest is unique among these many fine institutions. Those of you who have been fortunate enough to be part of our organization since we opened and those who have joined during the last several years, have found that the four cycle school year, the multiple option programs, the many opportunities for career and college placement, the field work internships, and all of the elements that make our school have provided you with superb preparation to do well in New York.

Many of you will be going to colleges in the City University, or to the fine local private institutions that provide all kinds of advanced training. Some, of course, will be going to out-of-town schools. Probably, most of you will return to the City to establish your lives. And the opportunities are here for those students who move directly into careers after graduation. We know that all of you can find a place in the most challenging and exciting business and industry metropolis anywhere in the country.

We are all very proud of our record and, particularly, of the fact that we have become an important part of this community. Relationships have been established with many organizations and agencies and, cooperatively, we have made it possible for our students to get an excellent start by learning how to cope with the realities of urban life and with the many demands that face people in the City.

The newspapers this morning depict many problems that face New York City. But we have had concerns before and have managed to overcome, because of the diversity of the people and the skills of the individuals who make up our working force, our government and our institutions. You, the graduates of Hillcrest, will soon be in a position to make major contributions to all of these segments of our City.

The diploma you receive is a very important document. It states that you are a graduate of Hillcrest High School of The City of New York and that you have completed an important portion of your early education. We know that you will look back with pride and remember the many opportunities that were made available in this high school of the future in a City that has a great future.

I want to take this opportunity to wish the members of the Class of 1975 the very best for everything that you may desire. I know that the entire staff shares this hope with me. We trust that our work has been done well. You have secured the goal that is available to all young people who enter high school, the Diploma. May your families enjoy the happiness that is theirs at this particular moment. We hope that you will remember us as being those concerned people who worked so hard to help you make the decisions to become an important part of our "Wonderful Town" and of the alumni of Hillcrest High School.

A Story

Maxine Pinkas

"Clean up your room before you go out to play. Your brother's room isn't always a mess. Why are you so terrible?"

Mother is yelling at me again. Terrible?! I'm not so terrible just because I'm not like Johnny. My room is a mess because I like to play. So does Johnny but mother cleans his room. Well I'm not going to clean it. I'll sneak out and go to play with Billy and Tommy.

"Having a big brother is a curse," I complained to Billy. "Mother loves him more than me. He is such a sissy and a goody-goody."

We sat down by the river and threw rocks to the bottom of it. Billy and Tommy were talking about baseball. They each had their stacks of baseball cards out and they were comparing them. I sat by myself leaning against a big oak tree. I thought about mom and dad and Johnny. They didn't love me. They didn't want me there. I was just stuck there, probably by accident. I pulled a small piece of grass out of the ground and examined it closely. There was a baby ant on it, running in every direction. At least he is free. He has no older brother to get him into trouble. How I hate Johnny. I hate him and my mother will all my heart. My dad ain't so bad. He favors Johnny too, but not as much as mother. I'm in a cage which my parents call a home. Why can't I be free like the ant?

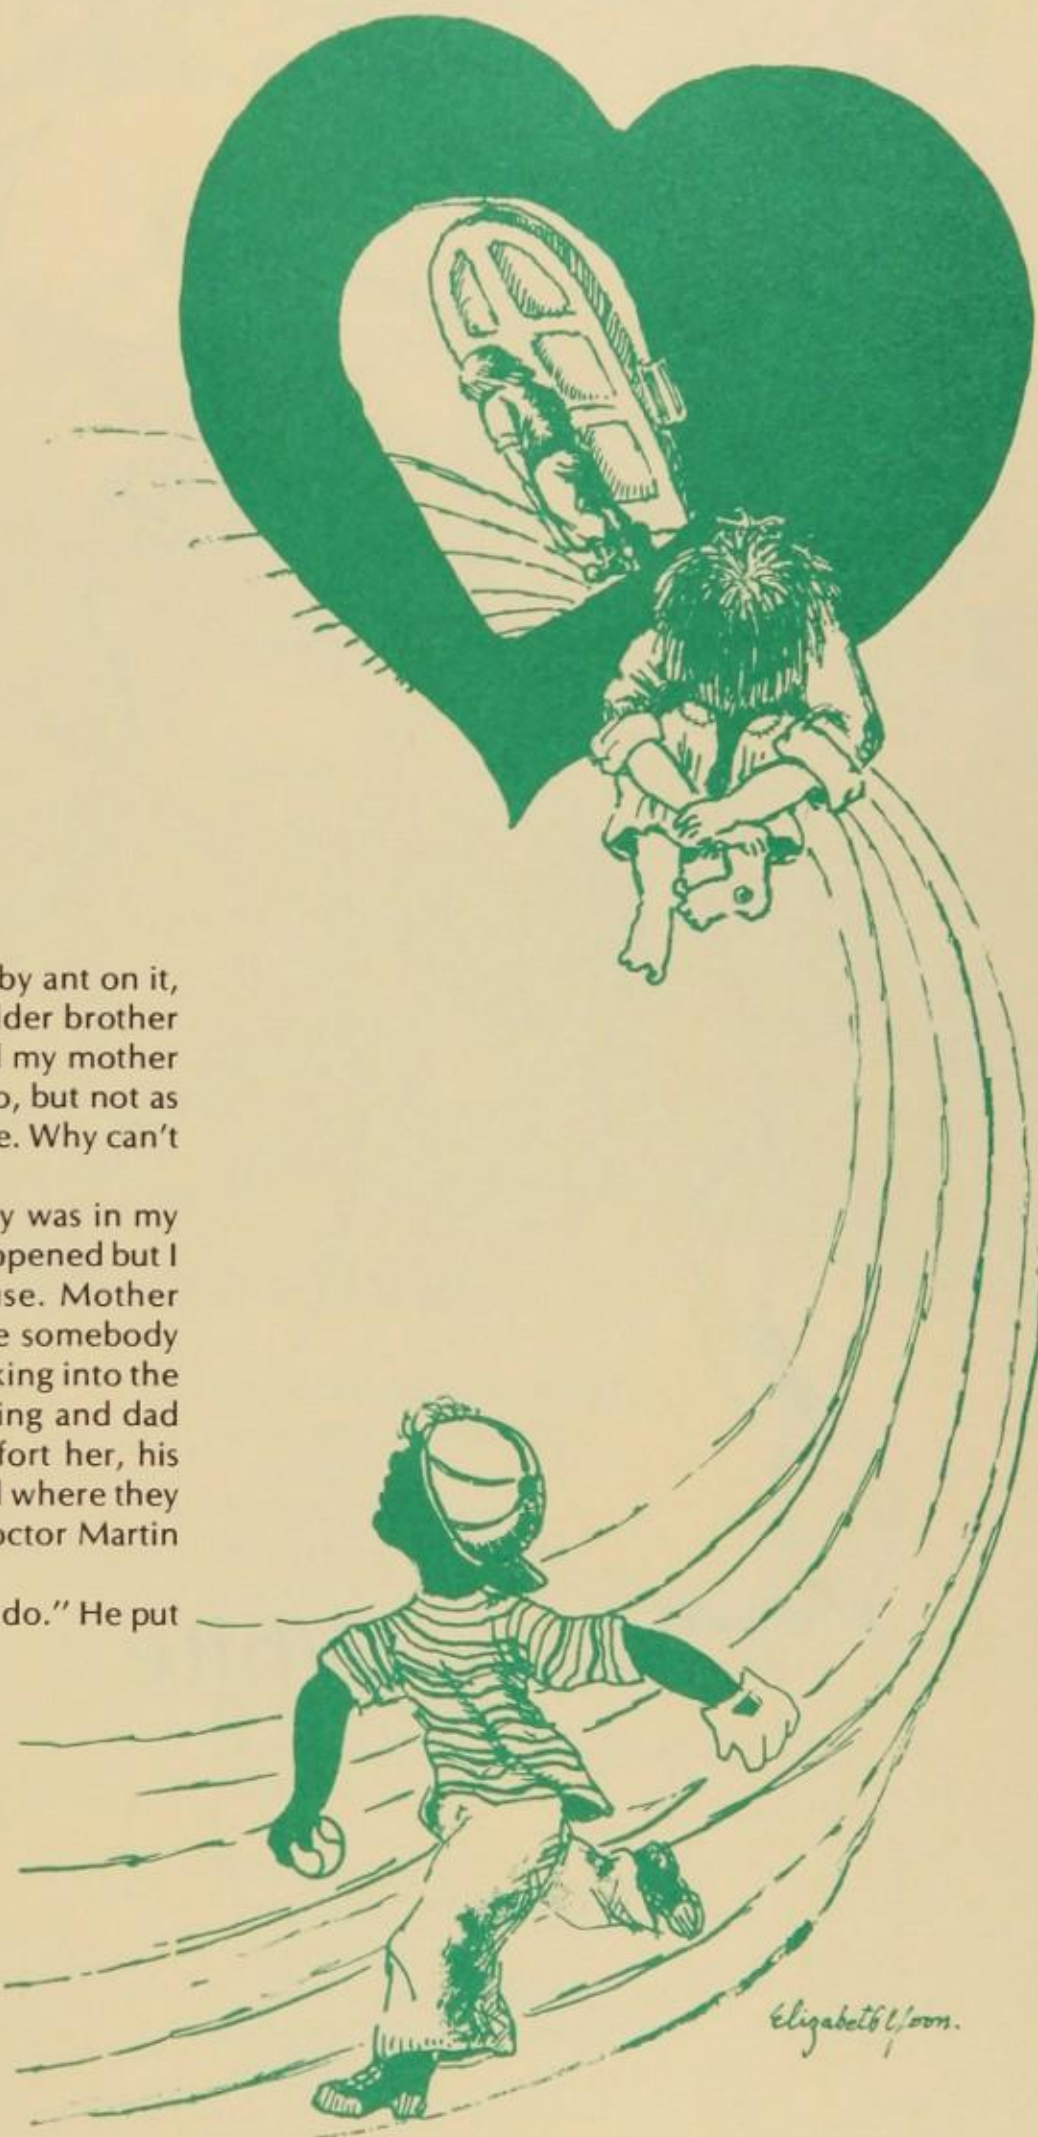

The next thing I remembered was lying in bed. Nobody was in my room and the door was closed. I didn't remember what happened but I felt something was wrong. It was too quiet in the house. Mother wasn't yelling at me like always. I heard a quiet sound like somebody was crying. It all started coming back to me now. I was walking into the house earlier that afternoon. I remember mother was crying and dad was standing beside her. Although he was trying to comfort her, his face was torn with grief. I looked down at my brother's bed where they standing. My brother was lying there very still, too still, Doctor Martin was shaking his head.

"I'm sorry," he said quietly. "There was nothing I could do." He put his equipment back into his bag and left.

"My God, oh my God" cried mother. I saw the tears in my father's eyes. He touched my brother's hand, but Johnny didn't move. Suddenly it dawned on me. Johnny is dead! How can he be dead? He is only nine. Dead. Dead. Dead. The words rang in my ears. Johnny's dead! Johnny's dead! The words stood there daring me to believe them.

"No" I screamed to the four walls of my room. "No, No, No."

I felt someone shaking me vigorously. I looked up and saw Tommy and Billy shaking me. I sat up and looked at the river. I no longer hated my brother, but I was grateful he wasn't dead. I looked at the piece of grass and noticed the ant was no longer there. I wondered if he had a home to go to like I did.

White

Piano keys flash white beneath my hands like the pearly breasts of gulls at sea and billowy, scattered clouds where angels sing in billowing robes of white There is the whiteness of a page waiting still for line or word A cake sweet and frosted white for someone's birth and the powdery cold dust of snow gleaming white.
Also, hospital halls and still clean sheets upon the beds
And the old and sick with chalk white faces White is Age creeping closer Then
birch trees come to mind
And out of my window
I gaze imagining stars that sparkle so white and that are so far away.

Tree, Black Woman

Sandra Robinson

Your seeds are planted in the soil of pain, fertilized by strength
Watered by pride.
With outstretched hand you maintain your native love

Stand, tree, through stormy weather For your own eternal crops, and there is no end to your harvest

With limbs, mind you support the towers of your culture like a nursing mother With wooded breasts you feed mild love.

Be not deciduous or the branch you inspire with hope will be bare of its struggling leaves And fall
To the bottomless earth

Concentrate on your roots They are the base of existence

After the fight I didn't feel bad. Usually when I fought with my son I would walk away feeling downright guilty, but not this time. Who the hell did he think he was? Here we were in the middle of an important war and that stupid boy wanted to leave home and fight. Normally I'd be proud to have my son fight, being a soldier myself, but when he told me it was for the opposite side, well that was the last straw.

"Go ahead," I had told him, "Go and become a damn Yankee, just don't call yourself my son anymore!"

Of course his mother was out there comforting him. That woman has a soft heart, too soft. I really should've knocked some sense into him. When he was small I would handle him good, but now that he's older he forgot how I grew him up, he forgot that he owes me something. So let him go and fight against his own father. It would serve him right if he got shot, it would serve him right if I shot him.

It's getting warmer in here by the minute. Any second now the Yanks could attack. They might be creeping around in the bushes at this very second. I feel very proud right now. When a spy had located the Northern troops camped a half mile off my land I immediately offered my house as a headquarters. I'm a little too old to be running around outside fighting, but the seargent said that I could do my part from inside the house. Boy it feels good wearing this old gray jacket again. When I was younger I was a damn good soldier. Bet I still am too.

— Angela Bianculli

Elsie's doing her part too. There she goes carrying water to the men. She really does have a soft heart. But every time I look at her I think of that boy. He looks so much like her. They got the same brown eyes. Once every two weeks she gets a letter from him, and she crys and writes back telling him, rather begging him, to come home. But he won't, he's too ignorant. There's usually something in the letter for me, but I never read it, as far as I'm concerned he don't exist. Dammit! Doesn't he know he's fighting on the wrong side!

Oh, my God! Here they come! The shots are ringing out like fire crackers. The battle has begun. All I can in this darkness is men falling all around me.

I can feel Elsie tugging on my arm shouting something about a young man wounded in the front yard. Can't she see I'm busy. Women can be so stupid at times. "Leave me alone, I'm busy shooting."

What the hell is going on? Who's that crying? Where's Elsie? The door is open, I hope she ain't hurt. There she is kneeling on the ground outside. Who's that she's holding? Oh, my God its our son! With tears in her eyes she looks up at me. Without her speaking a single word, I know that my son, has finally decided he wants to come home.

Night.
Surrounded by the hushed stillness of black velvet hours.
Easy tears slide, cascading gracefully through my outstretched hands.
Lead eye lid tired, weakly, I submit.
Instantly overcome by the pulsating blood rush of the turbulent spirit deeply hidden within.
A symphony of emotions;
the chaotic frenzy of unharmonious grappling sounds as they Rage, rage on,
and on.
Blatant brass blares of convulsive anger, screech against the pumping, pounding drums of fear, harsh horns of guilt; subtle yet powerfull, slither slide, interweaving within the musical tapestry as gentle guitars; sweet string saviors sing mighty melodies of love yielding mellow miles of logic paralleled by fearless compassion.
This symphony, this gathering of virgin emotion,
the purest forms of life, grandly conducted by a running rainbow figure vaguely familar to my frail thoughts, as they grope, dreamlike, through the musical maze.
The figure turns as I peer, straining to see, while an uneasy yet unformed question gnaws through my daze.
For an unmeasurable moment, I glimpse the leader, recognizing me.
The truth of myself.
Quickly, I reach out, fumbling, but she turns again, away out of my grasp.
A glaring flash of fire blazes my eyes,
Sun smashes everywhere.
Tearing me away.
Silencing the symphony, smothering its memory, encapsulating it in the vast distances of my mind.
Morning.

The background of the page is a green-tinted illustration of a long, straight city street. The street is flanked by tall, dark green buildings. A single figure is walking away from the viewer in the distance. The street is paved with light-colored tiles, and there are some faint, stylized markings on the ground. The overall mood is contemplative and solitary.

The Wanderer

Lost in a city of streets
Winding, searching streets Unsure of what will come
Of a turn in this labyrinth.

Who am I, you may ask.
A variety of things Like a stranger watching all
And living what has come.

Oh soul of searching roads,
Not sure of who you are Changing at any moment
Like the busy streets you explore,

When will you end your searching,
This useless wandering When, soul, will you find the street that is your own?

Waiting

Andrea R. Blumenfeld

He sits by the window enveloped in a frayed armchair its flowered pattern dulled
by the passage of time.
His thin, gnarled hands clasped tightly together rest motionless in his lap.
Strands of pure white frame a pinched, drawn face as yellowed skin stretches to cover sunken cheeks.
Bulging eyes peer in an unfocused fashion.
As the last bits of sun slide slowly through the window before dusk.
He is a study in silence.

Snow

Snow, you fall silently and mercilessly on the city Unmindful of what you are creating Snow you make the common abound with originality.
My world is transmuted . . . bleak and barren city though you are cold.
A city emerging crystalline like a moth in metamorphosis.
Snow, your lace-like patterns — star crossed, forever new Changing my gray unfeeling city.
Snow you hold a warmth, I did not feel in summer.
Why now, my love, do I feel this warmth?

by Amy Adler

The City

I stood and watched, the evening sky; blackly, bleakly somber, creeping, over a dying city.
Glinting knives flash in the shadows and, bloodstains, slowly seep from dying lips, Lips lapsing into a dreamless sleep.
Suddenly, slipping from it's black shroud,
The moon comes shimmering, shining in it's infinite light;

Amy Adler

A city comes alive!
People pushing, pulling, Straining to make contact with apathetic apparitions; Passing by a bright, boisterous bar; one hears music.
Jazz insinuates, Slithering, sliding over the stained pavement;
Slender sirens, hip swinging, start their nocturnal rounds.
Sensuous, stagnant, screaming city.

Fragile

Fran Drescher

Fragile

My cast-iron strands are gilded with gold Deceiving others often . . .

perhaps . . .

Nevertheless, to me they are a prison.

Had I wings, I'd bat them like dusty blankets out a high story window,

Beating hard against the war-battered bricks,

Had I the beak-like mouth or the screech-shrill voice,

I would scream away my rage

Let others call it song . . .

perhaps . . .

Had I those sharp fork-like feet,

I would claw and I would scratch,

Until my blood-blistered toes were weary from my madness perhaps . . .

But I've neither wings, nor claws, nor screech-shrill scream

Only the reality of My gilded strands of cast-iron gold.

Cry Of Laughter

Lauren M. Sterling

The Seagull flies without stretched wings Touching sky of blue and bursting
white
Touching unknown boundries
Forever
Only known to him
Landing on the shores Looking over miles of white peaked mounds That slash themselves against Time's undiscovered stone
He laughs with joy
The wind combs his face
And glides between each feather, Lays smoothly on his body
His journey, an unfinished one On . . . endlessly searching,
Till he knows what lights the sun.

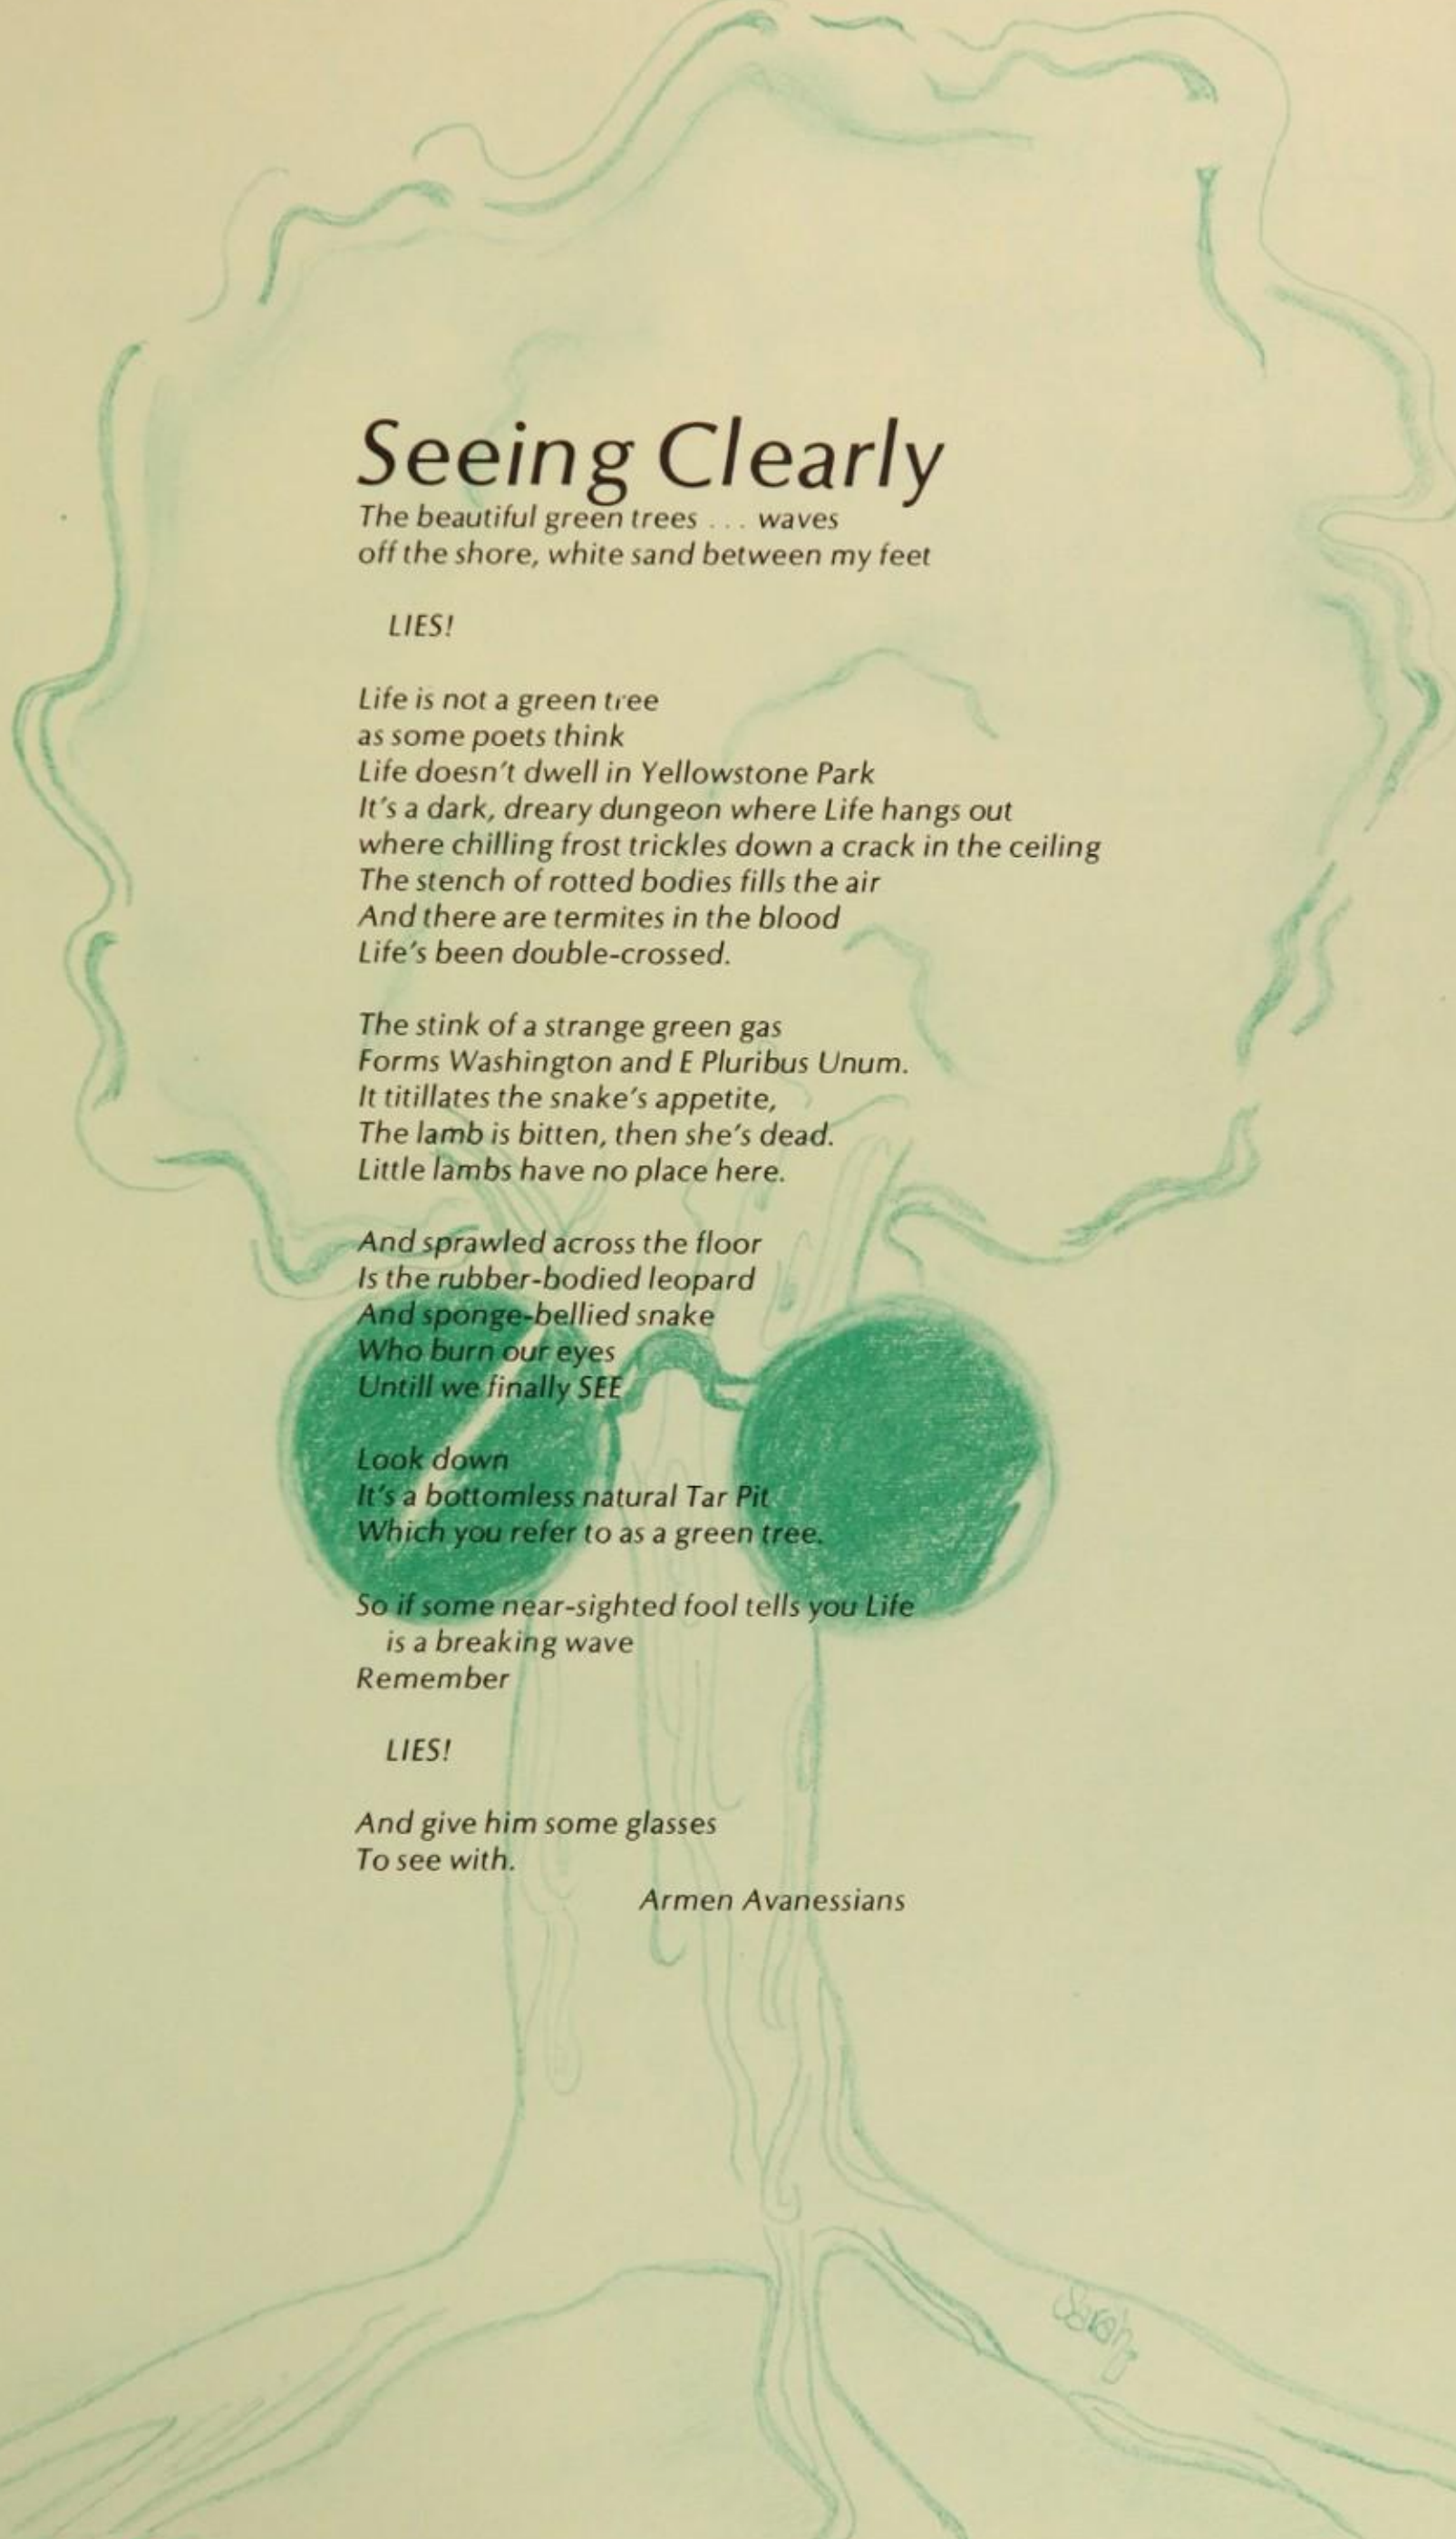

In Memorium

by Amy Adler

You tell me I'm unfeeling
You sob and tell me that your brother
That raven-head, once laughing; once loving, is lying dead behind some Egyption tank.
His bones, bleaching on some unforgotten bit of Sinai sand
You tell me I'm unfeeling.
Your father sits in darkness rocking, chanting in his chair.
A short time ago young — now grown old at once; Lamenting, the age old lament Lament for a young, dead Jewish warrior
You say I'm unfeeling, I am a Jew . . . Why then Can't I feel as you do . . .
I have never seen the blood of my brothers soaking into that mound of green where we once played I have never seen lovers pulled out of the arms of loved ones, to march off to war.
I have never run, screaming, arms over ears, . . . madly into a dark tunnel . . . not knowing If I would ever emerge again I have not . . . I did not know

Seeing Clearly

The beautiful green trees . . . waves off the shore, white sand between my feet

Life is not a green tree as some poets think Life doesn't dwell in Yellowstone Park It's a dark, dreary dungeon where Life hangs out where chilling frost trickles down a crack in the ceiling
The stench of rotted bodies fills the air
And there are termites in the blood Life's been double-crossed.

The stink of a strange green gas Forms Washington and E Pluribus Unum.
It titillates the snake's appetite,
The lamb is bitten, then she's dead.
Little lambs have no place here.

And sprawled across the floor
Is the rubber-bodied leopard
And sponge-bellied snake
Who burn our eyes
Untill we finally SEE

Look down
It's a bottomless natural Tar Pit Which you refer to as a green tree.

So if some near-sighted fool tells you Life is a breaking wave Remember

LIES!

And give him some glasses
To see with.

A New York — Hillcrest Retrospective...

Up in the heights of the evening skies I see my City of Cities float In sunset's golden and crimson dyes: I look and a great joy clutches my throat!
Plateau of roofs by canyons crossed: windows by thousands fire-furled — O gazing, how the heart is lost in the Deepest City in the World.

James Oppenheim

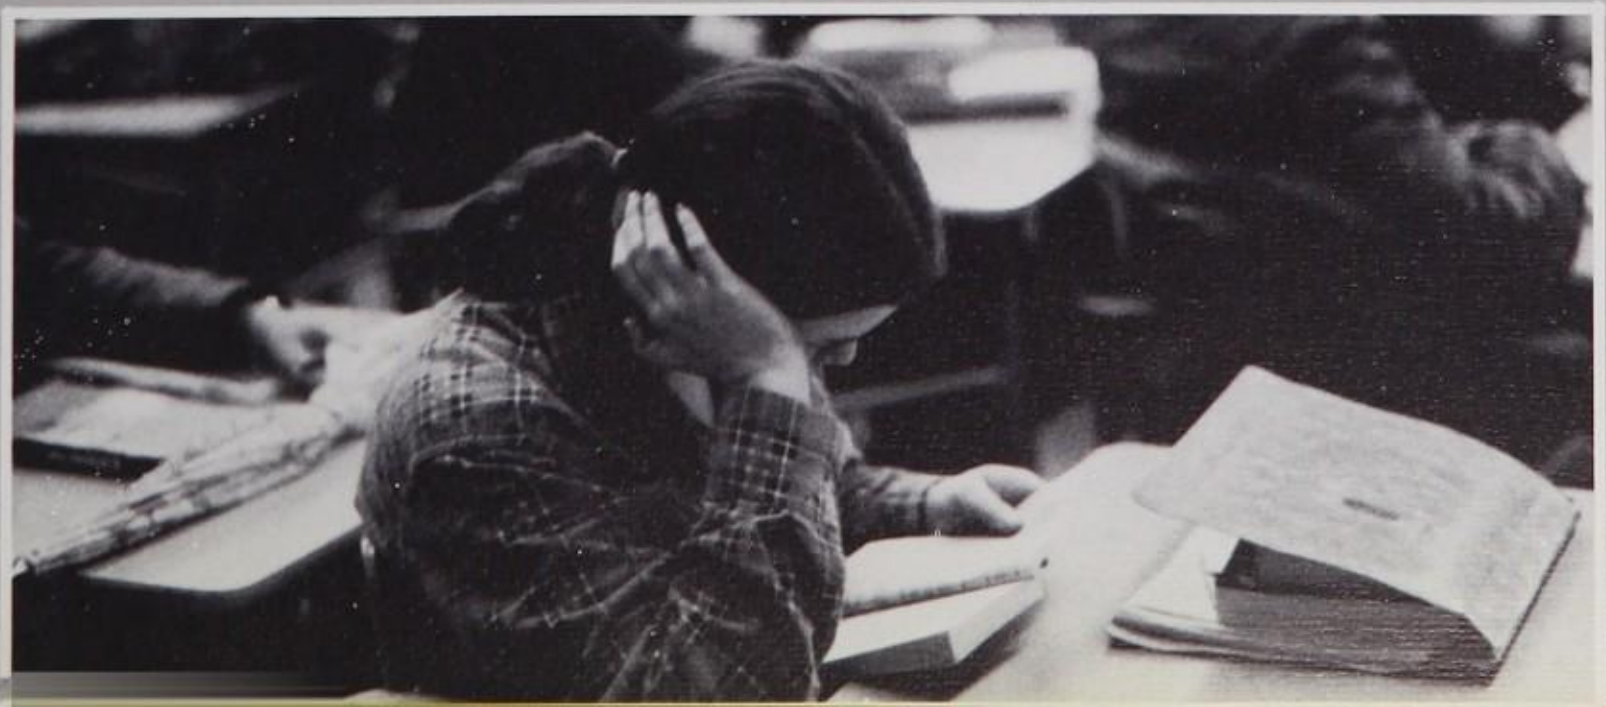

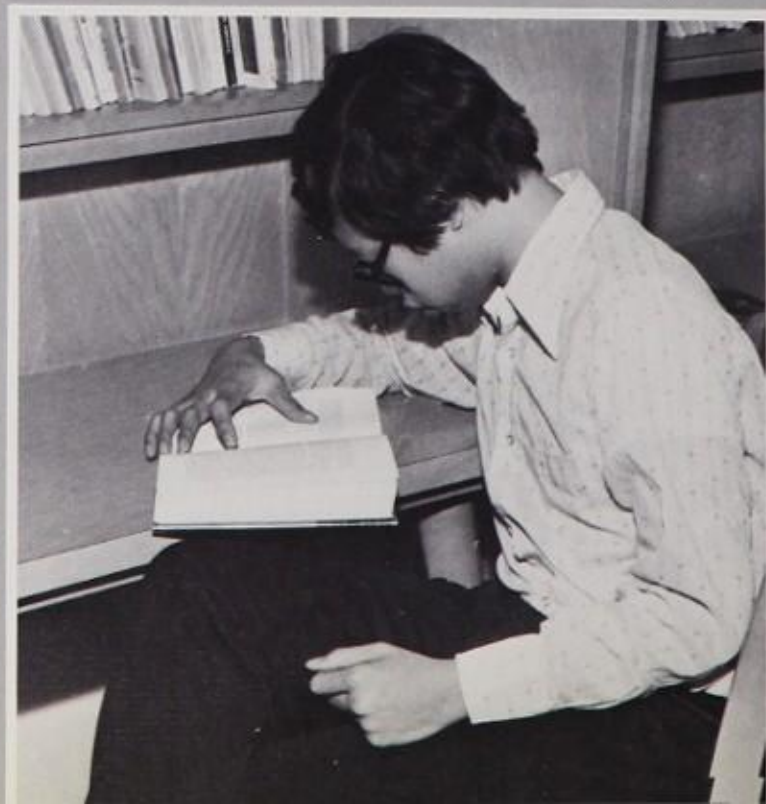

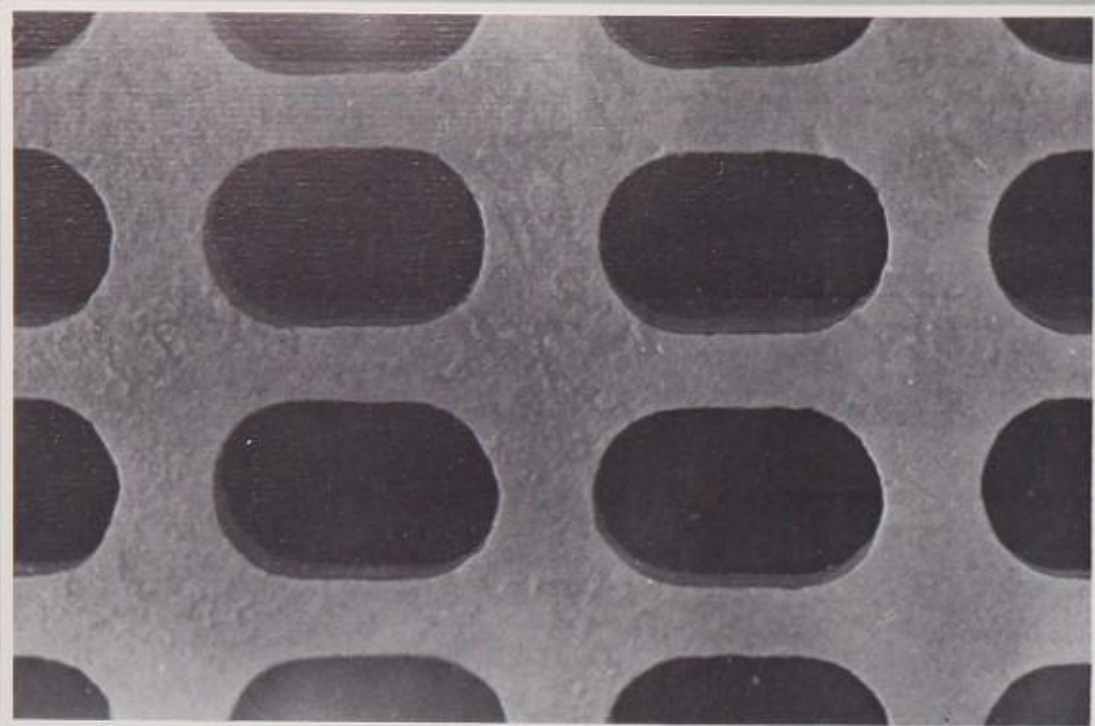

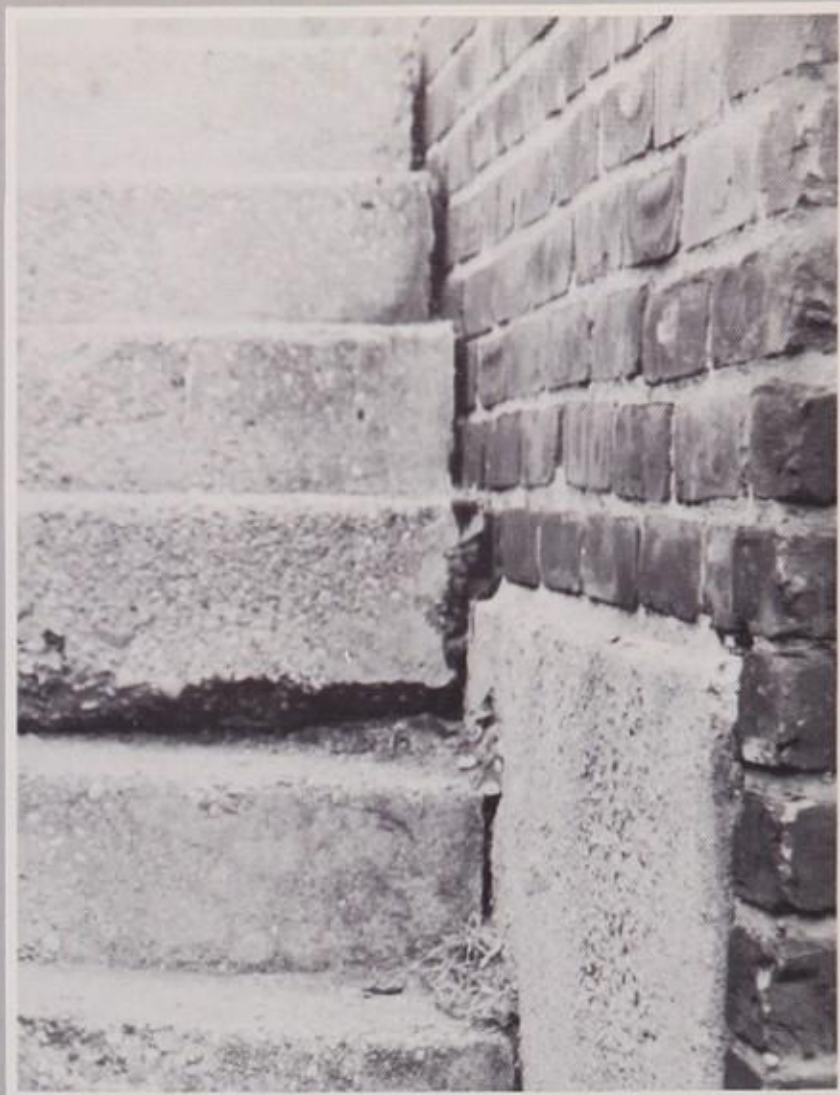

The
